

Why Daniel Craig Is the Best James Bond

Have you ever wanted to be
A little more like James Bond?

His charming elegance
His harmful irony
Masculine beauty

Is that what you want?
Have you ever wanted to be
Like James Bond?

First they had Sean Connery
His flamboyance was outstanding
He put irony and class
In that vodka Martini glass
The legendary vodka Martini
Shaken, not stirred

Then they had George Lazenby
A James Bond with more humanity
He seemed less-self assured
He seemed fragile
He got married and got hurt
Shaken and also stirred

Have you ever wanted to be
A little more like James Bond?

His charming elegance
His harmful irony
Masculine beauty

Is that what you want?
Have you ever wanted to be
Like James Bond?

The third was Sir Roger Moore
With more evidence on humor
And I think of "The Spy Who Loved Me"
His interaction with Barbara Bach
How lovely

She had him shaken and stirred

And how good was Timothy Dalton
A dark and angry interpretation
Flamboyant quite as Connery
But also a Bond in misery
A killer who suffered
A man shaken, never stirred

Have you ever wanted to be
A little more like James Bond?

His charming elegance
His harmful irony
Masculine beauty

Is that what you want?
Have you ever wanted to be
Like James Bond?

The fifth was Pierce Brosnan
On movies of science fiction

I think he wasn't bad
Too similar to Sean Connery
But worse when different
Unshaken, but stirred

Then they had Daniel Craig
He's the best, enough said
A hard troubled dark man
Full of elegance and wit
Sex appeal and grit
Slightly shaken, never stirred

So now you know
Why Daniel Craig is the best
James Bond
Troubled as Timothy Dalton
Charming as Roger Moore
Stylish as Sean Connery
Fragile as George Lazenby
Nothing like Pierce Brosnan
Have you ever wanted to be like him?

Have you ever wanted to be
A little more like James Bond?
His charming elegance
His harmful irony
Masculine beauty
Is that what you want?
Have you ever wanted to be...
Have you ever wanted to be
A little more like James Bond?
His charming elegance
His harmful irony
Masculine beauty
Is that what you want?
Have you ever wanted to be
Like James Bond?